“Lori had so many encouraging words to me when I was a young mother and her kids were already teenagers. She taught me about routines and how to laugh at myself. She also taught me all about couponing in the day when coupons were popular. One day she hatched up a plan to play a joke on my husband. Alan didn't mind my clipping coupons and running around to different stores to redeem them as long as we could use the things I purchased. So one day, Lori bought a bag full of canned cat food and gave it to me to take home even though we didn't have a cat. I put it with all my other groceries and when Alan asked what the cat food was for, I told him that I had coupons for it and it was on sale. Alan was afraid my couponing had spiraled out of control. I could say much more about how Lori was always willing to help, how she was hospitable and always trying to impart wisdom. And one last thing, she made her husband and kids a priority. I think everyone knew that Chris was her best friend. I'm so glad I knew her.
